Tom Brady got his stolen jerseys back, and now he's hooked on the number 12.

Last year Brady and Gisele Bündchen went into contract on a $20 million 11th-floor apartment at 70 Vestry, a luxury Robert A.M. Stern-designed building overlooking the Hudson. But Page Six can exclusively reveal that the couple recently toured their soon-to-be building and the Patriots' No. 12 wants to be on floor 12 instead.

A source told Page Six, "Perhaps Tom is sick of the Patriots' No. 12 jerseys, he decided he had to be on Leaving behind their 11th floor, Tom and Gisele Bündchen moved into a new 1,900-square-foot terrace.

The power couple was attracted to the building's modern, chic entrance. The 14-story building also features a gym and a steam room.

Tom and Gisele — who didn't go for the building's penthouse apartment at the towering One Madison in Manhattan until once construction at 70 Vestry is completed in 2018.

Developers Related declined to comment on Brady trading up to the 12th floor, but did note that the building is over 80 percent sold and they've done $100 million in sales this year, with only eight residences vacant.
